Joe Strummer: 'Black 47 is the only band that matters'

by devtob ♥

That's what The Clash's main man said in the 1990s, according to a wonderful valedictory story about the unique Irish-American band Black 47 in the New York Times on Friday.

Why would Joe Strummer say that about a relatively obscure regional band? Perhaps because of songs like this, about socialist labor leader and Easter Rising martyr James Connolly:

Adobe Flash Player or an HTML5-supported browser is required for video playback. Get the latest Flash Player Learn more about upgrading to an HTML5 browser

The chorus is:

My name is James Connolly
 I didn't come here to die
 but to fight for the rights of the working man small farmers too
 to protect the proletariat from the bosses and their screws so hold on to your rifles, boys don't give up your dream of a republic for the working class economic liberty

The occasion of the NYT story was Black 47's retirement. Band leader Larry Kirwan is 66 (though he doesn't look it) and other band members are somewhat likewise.

Even regional touring has, no doubt, become old for them.

More, below.

Black 47 were great live; I saw them about a dozen times, mostly in and around Albany, NY, and once a Connolly's in Manhattan.

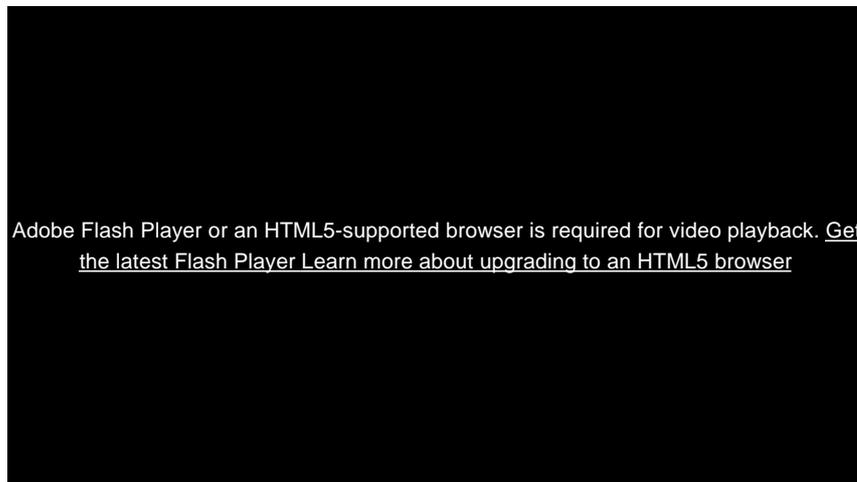

They were unique, with fierce original songs about Irish history and contemporary Irish-American life in New York City, backed by a wonderful mix of guitar, drums, clarinet, tin whistle, saxophone, trombone and uilleann pipes that made the songs rock.

Like "The Fire of Freedom", which has a great chorus too:

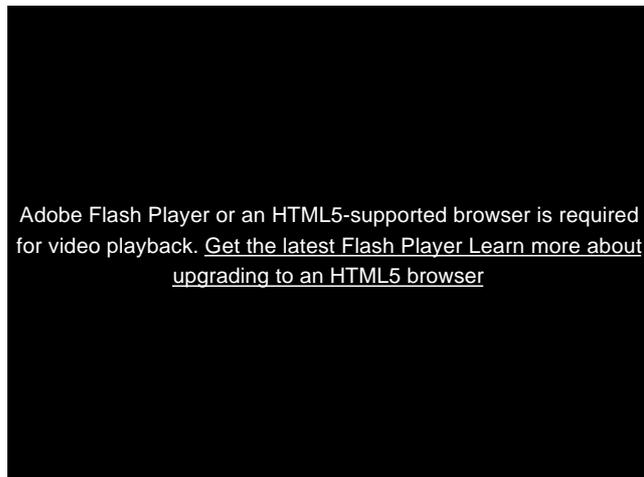

You can break down my door
you can even strip-search me never gonna take away my human dignity beat me, shoot me
flame keep on burnin'
never gonna put out the fire of freedom

And the hilarious coming-to-America tale "Funky Ceili":

Here's one about their beginnings, "Rockin' the Bronx":

The NYT story is pretty comprehensive, for a newspaper feature, and has several appreciations of Black 47's specialness, besides Strummer's.

Legendary NYC radio DJ Vin Scelsa: "I was just blown away. And I'd never had Irish cider like that before."

Record company executive Pete Ganbarg: "It was as if Springsteen and Shane MacGowan (lead singer of The Pogues) had this illegitimate love child. This combination of uilleann pipes and bodhran and the stench of Avenue B — it was something I'd never heard before. ... The more I listened, the more mesmerized I became."

Singer/songwriter Billy Bragg: "If you wanted to listen to the voice of your generation, you listened to music. Now you go to Twitter, you go to Facebook. I salute Black 47; I'm sorry to see them go."

Brandy Kish, a 20-year fan at a recent upstate gig: "I fell in love with the band's energy. Seeing them tonight brings back the feeling of friends and family and everything is good."

And Himself, Larry Kirwan: "I wasn't real impressed by the fame thing. I knew it for what it was. You enjoy it, and it moves on to someone else. It was always about the music for us — music and politics."

Yes, the politics -- from the name that references 1847, the darkest year of the Great Hunger, to rousing songs about Irish revolutionary heroes like Connolly and Michael Collins and others about recent immigrants struggling to get by in the metropolis and the problems faced by veterans of the Iraq War -- Black 47 was always about the music and the politics.

In their final album "Last Call," politics are still important, especially in "US of A 2014":

Hey kid, got a job for you, now you're finally out of graduate school
Here's your desk your computer, excel sheet, roto roter
You be workin' 9 to seven, occasionally past eleven
But that's okay, me oh my, jobs these days so hard to find
What you talkin' about, cash in the hand, think this is a rock & roll band
You're my intern, get with the program, your Daddy pay for your health care & your futon

Welcome to the new republic
Say hello to your American dream
And you better know who you're talking to
You better be born with a silver spoon
In the US of A Twenty Fourteen

Another fan was Ric Ocasek (Cars, a band that has aged sorta well IMO, though the songs from this distance sound more like bubblegum than they did then).

Believe he produced an album of theirs. Maybe two?

I always wanted to go to one of those Connolly's shows for St. Pat's, never got around to it. If they are really retiring now I'm bummed.

▼ I used to see Black 47 at Paddy Reilly's (2+ / 0-)

in NYC on a somewhat regular basis. That bar was one of my roommate's and my "living rooms" - NY apartments are small :)

They were great. I am pretty sure that I either have a CD or a 45 from those days and we used to get special dispensation from the owners when we would dance on the bar there even though it wasn't normally allowed.

How funny. They were awesome.
